

How to destroy writer's block

A mini-guide on destroying writers block

Take a break

Sometimes the best thing you can do is take a break and get out of your head. who knows, maybe when you get back things will be better.

Some things you can do on a break:

- 1. read a good book
- 2. take a walk
- 3. Watch a good movie/ tv show
- 4. Work on a smaller project (short story, poem, etc)
- 5. Catch up with some friends

Now Write 2

Hear me out, I know that the whole point of writer's block is that you aren't able to write. But you can write something else, something that isn't your novel

Some other things you can write are:

- poems
- short stories
- short stories set in your world

You can also open a new document and continue your wip there. This way you have no pressure for it to be good.

Write another scene

Who said you have to write in order? Well, you don't. Pick a scene in your WIP you are excited about and write it. Do you like writing romance scenes or fight scenes? Write it. Want to write the ending first? Do that.

You can also write backstory for your characters, write journal entries, or write a scene you love from another character's pov

Nov 4 Outline

Hear me out before you come at me.

If you decide to outline your novel then you won't get stuck. If you have an outline you will always know where your story has to go.

Outlines don't always have to be super detailed. You can use bullet points or just a thought dump. I have an entire post on outlines so check it out if you want to learn how.

Talk it out

If you have no outline and can't decide what you want next, talk it out with someone. If you have writer friends talk to them. Or just talk to your family and friends,

Saying it out loud can help and if you have someone else listen, they may even chime in with an idea of their own.
